Travel As a Spiritual Act

Susan Wynn

Even if it's not a pilgrimage, travel can be spiritual. We'll be looking at the spiritual nature of travel from a variety of perspectives.

The Club From Nowhere

Jacquie Zarley

The White Privilege crash test dummy is back to share some more white privilege blunders you may be able to relate to. This sermon specifically focuses on the role white women play in perpetuating white privilege.

Our Second Principle

Pamela Garn Nunn

The importance of "justice, equity, and compassion in human relations" seems obvious, but the inclusion of all three elements carries a powerful message and way to live one's life. This morning we will explore our second principle and how it might guide us in what seems to be an increasingly "uncivil" world.

The Doors of Perception - Open or Closed?

Barret Bills

Psychedelics are in the midst of a renaissance, with influential leaders and a growing number of health practitioners touting benefits in promising research addressing challenges like depression, PTSD, and addiction. Despite some fascinating connections between our tradition and these compounds, we seem unusually silent about our perceptions of them. What do we as UUs make of it all, given our unique pluralistic religious inspirations and convictions? Join us for an exploration of the intersection of sex, drugs, rock and roll, science, fear... and faith. Maybe not in that order. Discussion to follow service.

Tracing the Living Tradition of Sacred Song

Christie Anderson

A historical overview of American sacred music will be shared during a worship service of spirited music led by an old time string band. We'll explore the roots of some of our favorite hymns and African-American spirituals and examine instances of alterations by various religious groups, including UUs. You'll be encouraged to consider whether these alterations are blasphemous or meaningful enhancements.
